AKASHI

Akashi distillery is Japan's southernmost distillery and holds Japan's first whisky license, issued in 1919. Serious malt production did not begin until 1984. Only a stone's throw from Kobe Bay, it's the closest whisky distillery to any coast in Japan and this maritime air is reflected in the malt.

MARS -SHINSHU

Mars Shinshu - makers of Iwai and Komagatake- is Japan's highest whisky distillery, at nearly 800 meters. The Hombo family have been distilling for more than a century and they added whisky to their repertoire in 1949 in Kagoshima. That was the southernmost whisky made in Japan until 1984, when all whisky production was moved to the current location in Nagano.
